Karnataka is a little to the west, just outside the city walls. In many ways, this is the most attractive beach on India's west coast and is usually deserted, making it the best option for undisturbed swimming – especially for female travelers. Chowpaty Beach, Mumbai
The Chowpaty Beach is located at the top of Marine Drive and is an institution in Mumbai. In the evenings and weekends, Mumbaikars gather here in large numbers on this city beach – not to swim (the sea is bad), but to hike, sit on the sand, nibble Kulfi and Bhel puri, clean their ears and look across the bay while the children ride a pony or curly Ferris wheel. Anjuna Beach, North Goa
The atmosphere at the southern end of Anjuna Beach is much more beautiful than in the north, where a pretty and more sheltered bay is home to a crowd of mostly twenty people. A constant trance soundtrack thumb from the barracks behind it cranks up to proper parties after dark, as the Curlies bars and neighboring Shiva Valley take turns to maximize their sound systems and host international DJs during the season. Chai ladies and snack holders sit on the sand, just like the raves of old, but the party usually grinds sharply to stop at 10 p.m. Anjuna Beach in North Goa © Pavel Sapozhnikov/Shutterstock

Morjim beach itself is dramatic and worth a walk, especially in the early morning when you see teams of fishermen pulling huge hand nets out of the surf. The spit at its southern end, opposite Chapora Fort, is also a great bird watching hotspot, making this one of the best beaches in India for a wide range of reasons.

Arambol, North Goa
Arambol's main drag is a winding street lined cheek-by-jowl with clothes and duvet stalls, travel agencies, internet cafes and souvenir shops selling tourist cafes. The alley bends downhill to the main beach – dotted with wooden outlets and one of the most picturesque in southern India. The best view of it is from the crucifix and small Parasrama shrine on the hill to the north, if is a particularly quiet place at sunset. After dark, when the hula-hoopers, fire-jongleurs and Bhajan singers have turned home, the candles and lights of the barracks illuminate the beach to magical effect. Mandrem, North Goa
From the other side of the creek, which borders the edge of Ashwem, a magnificent and largely empty beach stretches north towards Arambol – the last pristine section of the north coast
Olive Ridley sea turtles nest on the quietest spots, and you are more than likely to catch a glimpse of one of the white-bellied fish eagles that live in the Casuarina trees – their last stronghold in the north of Goa.
Palolem, South Goa
With the gradual spread of package tourism along the coast, Palolem, a one Drive south of Margao along the main road, Goas is the most visited beach (also in the realm of the famous Goa beaches!), attracts crowds of sun-worshippers from November to March. Against a backdrop of wooded hills, its bay is spectacular, although the crowds can feel overwhelming in the high season. Palolem Beach, South Goa © Dan Baciu/Shutterstock
Marine Parade, Odishaln the west of the city, along the Marine Parade, the atmosphere is more like a British Victorian resort. This route is very much the domain of the local tourism industry and the beach is much cleaner here. It is a pleasant place to stroll and is very animated after sunset when the night lyre souvenir market gets underway. Local fishermen patrol the beach as lifeguards; Recognizable by their triangular straw hats and dhotis, they wade into the surf with their punters and literally hold hands to keep them on their feet – the undercover demands victims every year, so weak swimmers should be careful. Gopalpur-On-Sea, Southern Odisha
After it was once a lively place, today it is the only time you will probably encounter a lot of action, during festivals and holidays, when the village is temporarily inundated with Bengali holidaymakers. For the rest of the year, his desultory collection of seaside hotels stands idle, left to the strange backpackers and armies of hard-working fishermen (katis) pulling in hand nets on Gopalpur's endless coastline to relax and enjoy the warm sea breeze. Sunbathing on the beach will quickly put you at the center of attention, but its uncrowded sand, punctuated by coconut groves, sleepy lagoons and tiny streams, makes a good setting for a rejuvenating walk. The marina, Chennai
One of the longest city beaches in the world, the marina (Kamaraj Salai) stretches five kilometers from the port on the southeast corner of George Town to the new the Cathedral of San Thome. Today, the beach itself is a sociable route, people of idle paddlers, picnickers and pony riders; Every afternoon, crowds gather around the beach market. Although, its location, just a little downstream from the port, the recess of waste and smelly vapours, combined with its function as a toilet for the fishing community, somewhat distract from its natural beauty. Benaulim, South Goa
An ideal first place if you have just arrived in the region is Benaulim, six kilometers west of the second city of the state, Margao. The most travel-friendly resort in the area, Benaulim stands in the middle of a spectacular 25 km long stretch of pure white sand. Although increasingly carved by Mumbai timeshare companies, low-cost accommodation here is plentiful and from a high standard. Lighthouse Beach, Kovalam
The largest and most developed bay of Kovalam, known for obvious reasons as Lighthouse Beach, is the place where most foreign tourists gather. Lined by a cobbled esplanade, the seafront promenade of shops and hotels stretches along the entire length of the from the lighthouse of the same name at the southern end. You can scale the 142 spiral steps and twelve ladder rungs to the viewing platform to enjoy a fine view. Lighthouse Beach, Kovalam, India © Vivek BR/Shutterstock
Kovalam Beach, Kovalam
Kovalam Beach, the third of the bays, is dominated from above by the angular chalets of five-star Leela Kempinski. Carriage loads of excited Kerala day trippers descend here at the weekend, but at other times it offers a peaceful alternative to the beach further south and why it makes our list of the best beaches in India. Papa Nashini, Varkala
Known in Malayalam as Papa Nashini (Sin Destroyer), Varkala's beautiful white sandy beach has long been associated with ancestral worship. Devotees come here after praying in the old Janardhana Swamy temple on the hill in the south, and then perform mortuary rituals on the beach, led by specialized pujaris (priests). The best time to observe the rites is in the early morning, shortly after sunrise. And note that it is best to keep your camera in your pocket. Papanasam Beach, Varkala
Supported by red laterite cliffs, Varkala's coast is impressively scenic and the beach relatively relaxing – although its religious associations ensure that attitudes to public nudity (especially female) are less liberal than other coastal towns in India. Western sun worshippers are expected to stay until the northern end (away from the main puja area reserved for funeral rites), where they are served by a nonstop parade of local hi-ananas-coconut?sellers. Sea otters can also occasionally be spotted playing on the cliffs by the sea. Cherai Beach, Kochi, Kerala
The nearest beach of Kochi is worth the effort to reach Is Cherai, 25 km north on Vypeen Island. A 3 km long strip of golden sand and thumping surf, it is trapped on a narrow strip of land between the sea and a very pretty backwater area of glassy lagoons. Chunky granite sea defenses prevent the waves from devouring the band of fishing villages that live along this strip. Nowhere, however, is the sand more than a few meters wide at high tide, and the tow can become quite strong. Nevertheless, Cherai is gaining popularity every year, and a number of small resorts and guesthouses have emerged to accommodate the trickle of mainly foreign travellers who make their way here from Fort Cochin.

Ullal, Mangalore
If you are looking to escape the city for a few hours, then go to the village of Ullal, where a long sandy beach stretches over miles. It is rightly a popular place for a walk, especially in the evening when mangaloreans come to watch the sunset, but a strong undertow makes the difficult and sometimes uncertain. You could be better at the pool of Summer Sands Beach Resort, just behind the beach. Ullal Village Beach near Mangalore © Mikhail Nekrasov/Shutterstock
Kudlee Beach, Karnataka
This wonderful 1 km long sweep Gold-white sand, protected by a pair of steep-sided promontory, is now interrupted by about fifteen restaurants and a real hotel. This is the longest and widest stranded Von Gokarna, and with decent surf too, although the water can be dangerous. Discover more of India with the Rough Guide to India.
